RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 24 pages. Original publisher: Cleveland, OH : Army Research Laboratory, NASA-Glenn Research Center, 2009 OCLC Number: (OCOLC)426120288 Subject: Gas-lubricated bearings. Excerpt: . . . Figure 7. Representative performance map showing hypothetical operating points. Operating points A and C are in the low load region and point B is in the high load region. Performance maps for other foil bearings types ( overlapping leaf, multiple top foils ), support complexity ( backing springs, multiple bump layers ), and size are expected to exhibit the same general behavior since they all rely on the principle of hydrodynamics but will vary according to their own design characteristics. For example, the effect of bearing size on power loss was studied by testing the bearing in figure 8, which was of similar design to the 35 mm bearing but larger. This bearing's inner diameter and length were nominally 51 mm and had a type K thermocouple tack welded to the middle of the spacer block and positioned just below the plane of the top foil near the leading edge to monitor the bearing's internal temperature. Bearing preload was not measured but is estimated to fall in the range of 6. 9 to 10. 3 kPa. The bearing weighed 4. 4 N and did not require a steel spacer to properly fit in the smallest Anviloy ring. To address the ball defect frequencies the rig was rebuilt with new ball bearings. We only tested radial loads of 48 N and 179 N, and followed the same test set-up and procedure, except thermal management was administered by directly cooling the journal ( 10 ). As can be seen in figure 9, the resulting 2-D plot does not show a huge difference between load curves, indicating...
